GENDER BIAS IN THE JUDICIARY

Gender bias manifests itself in many ways, both subtle and obvious. In some cases, the bias is so blatant and damaging to the integrity of the judicial system that disciplinary action is appropriate. In other cases, the bias may be unconscious and unarticulated, but still exert an improper influence over legal proceedings. While disciplinary action may not be warranted, it is important to recognize and address the threat that gender bias - even if unconscious - poses to judicial integrity and the fairness of judicial decisions.

JUSTICE JUDITH JONES

Justice Judith Jones is a justice of the Court of Appeals in Trinidad and Tobago, having previously served as a High Court judge. She is also a Fellow of the Commonwealth Judicial Education Institute.
